THE GRAND REVIEW.

Armies of the West on Parade.

Finest Pageant of the War.

GRAND Ovation to General

SHERMAN.

Magnificent Display of the Troops.

Telegraphic Correspondence Cincinnati

Commercial.

WASHINGTON, May 24.

The grand parade of the troops composing the military division of the Mississippi, under command of Major General Sherman, took place through Pennsylvania avenue to-day, in presence of the President and Cabinet, the Diplomats, the corps commanders of the Army of the Potomac, and at least one hundred and fifty thousand spectators.

Yesterday was one of the grandest days in the history of the city. The contingent, to-day carried off the palm of the grandest ever known in the history of modern times. The interest in this review was far greater than that manifested on yesterday's display.

People from the Eastern States had come in great numbers, and the Westerners, who had marched from Atlanta, and thence to Savannah, and Washington, while the Washington throng was overflowing with visitors, the city was crowded with people.

The morning brought additional thousands. To procure a room, or place to sleep, is an utter impossibility.

Thousands of persons were compelled to walk about during the night. Every hotel and boarding-house in the city is crowded.

People slept on the terraced stands in front of the White House, in railroad trains, public halls, and in fact, in any place affording shelter.

Not even under the proverbial serenity of glorious Italy could human imagination picture a more interesting and lovely day than that which dawned this morning. The entire day was clear and cool, and added additional zest and vigor to the troops. The Fire Department throughout the city had been made to perform the duty of cleaning and purifying the streets during the whole of the previous night, so that the line of march through which our war-weary troops passed, was at least endurable.

Nothing, in short, could have been more favorable, both in regard to the weather, police regulations, and general surroundings of the whole affair, from the start to the closing scene, to render this grand review of the colossal army fresh from its labors of conquest and of glory, one of unparalleled success.

During last night, the Army of the Tennessee marched out of its camp in the rear of Arlington Heights, and bivouached near the long bridge, on the Virginia side of the Potomac. At dawn, the army commenced to move across the river, by the route of the avenue to the Capitol, and out of the Capitol, were the 15th Corps, under command of Major General John A. Logan, formed to lead a grand column. At precisely 9 o'clock, the signal gun for the morning of the grand review fired by Lieutenant Colonel Ross,

Chief of Artillery of the 15th Corps, General Sherman and staff, and the repeated cheers of thousands, while the ladies and children bedecked the General and his staff, and the line of the staff and escort made a fine appearance as they rode a few yards in advance of the column. The General was the recipient of continued ovation as he proceeded up the avenue. The thousands
